When voltage is applied current flows through each of the RC circuits. The amount of time required to charge the capacitor is dependant on the $C \times R$ values of each RC circuit. Obviously the larger the $C \times R$ the longer it will take to charge the capacitor. The amount of current needed to charge the capacitor is determined by the following equation:

An electrical double layer capacitor/Supercapacitor is nothing but a high-capacity capacitor with capacitance values much higher than normal capacitors but lower voltage limits. Supercapacitors store charge electrostatically (non-Faradaic) by ...

Advance high voltage and high current capacitors are designed for wide range of applications such as Induction heating (tank circuits), Energy storage, Filtering, bypass and coupling. These capacitors non-inductive, self-healing and are available either in dry type or partially oil impregnated construction type.
